A mood board or an inspiration board, is a fashion design tool that is used to convey a theme or a mood. A fashion designer uses mood boards to transfer the theme of their designs onto a physical or a digital board, which will translate the overall message of their fashion line. The mood board should include a variety of visual references, which should include images, textures, fabrics, fibres, and anything that inspires the designer or reminds them of how they feel in regards to their design. The board should also relay the design's colour story and other elements like line and shape.

A range plan includes an overview of a designer's entire collection, their financial parameters, and is designed to include the specifics of a collection. As such, it will include everything from fabric selections, the number of garments, colour stories, illustrations, proportions, order quantities, and sizes.
